A combination of breezy winds and low relative humidity values will lead to elevated fire weather conditions today.

A complex of showers and thunderstorms is moving through Central and South Texas this morning. Additional showers and thunderstorms are expected to develop across parts of Central and North Texas later this morning through the day. Best chances for rain/storms will be across our southeast counties with less coverage expected from the Waco area northward. Low storm chances will continue into tonight before all of the precipitation moves east early Monday morning.

There is a slight risk for severe thunderstorms across much of East Texas, Southwest Arkansas, and all of North Louisiana today through this evening. Large hail, damaging winds, and isolated tornadoes will be the primary threats. Locally heavy rainfall may also lead to localized flash flooding.

There is now a Flash Flood Watch in effect until 3pm on Sunday. 2-4 inches of rain have fallen across areas of Travis, Williamson, and Blanco Counties today with another 1-3 inches possible tonight and Sunday morning. For this reason we have issued the Flash Flood Watch.

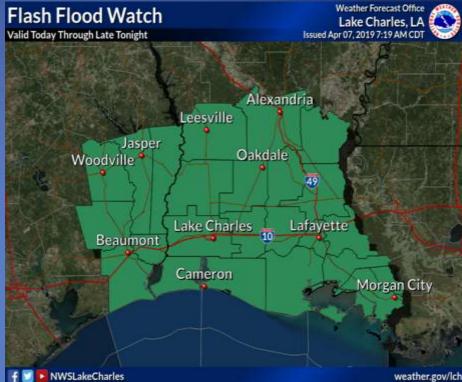

Scattered to numerous showers and scattered thunderstorms will continue, mainly for areas along and east of a Burnet to Pleasanton line through early afternoon. Flash flooding, large hail and damaging winds will be the main severe weather concerns.

Severe weather and heavy rainfall possible on Sunday for all of SE Texas.

FLASH FLOOD WATCH IN EFFECT THROUGH LATE TONIGHT... .A vigorous upper level storm system and slow moving cold front will move across the region today through tonight triggering numerous showers and thunderstorms across the area. Grounds are saturated from previous heavy rains. Fresh flash flooding will likely develop where training of thunderstorms develop and hourly rainfall rates exceed what the soil is able to take in.

Timing of the strong to severe storms are expected to move into the Rio Grande Plains and western Brush Country shortly after 3 AM this morning, moving east into the Coastal Plains and Coastal Bend around daybreak Sunday. Keep an eye on radar and stay safe!

Scattered to numerous strong to severe thunderstorms will be possible this morning. These thunderstorms will be moving east to west through the morning, exiting the area by noon or early afternoon. Expect high temperatures to reach the mid to upper 80s today, with generally S/SE winds turning north later this morning.
